Foreword

ur present reality is that instead of "changing the world" through our acts of service and compassion, the world has forcibly changed us. COVID-19 brought out the best of our elements from within, combining them with uncertainty, a fear for life and a deep sense of grief over the loss of one too many. All this, casting us into an unfamiliar and even painful mold that would not only help us become stronger in order to get through this crisis, but empower us to be there for others, in ways we never planned for. We were witness to the unbounded heart of our benefactors, as medical equipment and supply donations for hospitals and front liners were coursed through us. Serving also as a channel of funding for basic nutritional support and medications for our indigent patients and their families throughout the time of quarantine, the team took no delay in delivering monthly packs to each one we are caring for.

The Ruth Foundation remained steadfast in our care for others, with our staff extending themselves selflessly, serving as source of strength, light and hope to those we visited, spoke with and encouraged. With each patient call, coordination, debriefing, team devotion, supplies delivery, donation turn over, meeting, internal webinar, from each meaningful write up, crafted training module, guidance document, communication system and design, there was all heart and we met this present crisis head-on. This is certainly a time where supportive and palliative care plays an even more critical part in the health of our nation and where "Compassionate Communities" must be the new normal, while keeping true to our rallying cry of Care, Dignity and Hope.

Home to the Minimum but Connecting to the Maximum

TRF still took strides to check on patients who really needed face to face visits, while most patients were attended to by weekly phone calls from our nurses. Those who went on visits did so voluntarily and followed a protocol for infection control through adequate PPE's and disinfecting measures. Visits were largely limited as the team also did not want to compromise the safety of our patients (who mostly with low/ compromised immune systems) considering the possibility of cross-contamination.

Phone Consultation & Follow-Up

Though our team is still not able to visit our patients regularly, technology has kept us up to date with our patients' conditions.

TRF X COVID-19 RESPONSE

Social Works

Being at home did not stop our Social Workers in connecting with our patients and assisting them with referrals.

Online Meetings

We thank technology for making it possible to meet together and still maintain 2 meters apart. Our weekly meetings are for general updates, Spiritual Care, and patient care updates.

HOPE Delivery Our Team

Our team has been preparing and giving out much needed basic nutritional support for our patients to help them get through the lockdown.

PURCHASING

Hi-Flow Oxygen Machines

HFOMs are used as a form of noninvasive respiratory support for patients with progressing COVID19 pneumonia. Many hospitals have now been in need of this as an initial life saving intervention for COVID patients and the foundation is grateful for the opportunity to help facilitate the continuing procurement of these machines.
